The referencially decided by the vote of Wisconsin it-self, notwithstanding that the state organization had not paid dues to the mational organization since February. Its vote of over 1,000 was therefore allowed to count against those of other state organizations that had paid dues for every month up to the time the referendum was taken. Exclusive of Wisconsin, the vote of the general party gave a majority of 456 for the rist resolution, and a majority of 294/or the second. That means that the national party outside of Wisconsin (which was practically under trial) disapproves of the policy represented by Berger and the at-titude assumed by the Wisconsin organization. The policy of no com-promise is therefore practically sustained. As we have shown the result was only atrived at the vote of Wisconsin, It this will give Comrade Berger any sat-tion he is at liberty to enjoy it. But it must be remembered that the comin organization cannot now be recognized until it applies for and pts "a charter such as all the states have accepted," and it com-with the same conditions as other states. In other words, it is up to the Wisconsin state organization to get the national organization or be no longer recognized as part of it. The Wisconsin committee, by the way, promulgates through the nai-ol office, another document against the Creamine referendum, in the e of state autonomy and other things.
